

Apparently Lee used to keep a box of “souvenirs” from his victims – a box containing all of the judgments and restraining orders against him along with letter from his parents writing him out of the will for being such a terrible father and husband, among other things.

He no longer keeps such souvenirs as it once outed him to a previous victim (a.k.a. “girlfriend”) who searched through his belongings while he was out of town. Apparently, he was out of town for a personal growth workshop, the one he might have told you about, crediting it with making him a better man. He only went because he was pressuring a yet another victim to marry him and she insisted he attend the workshop. While there, in addition to learning how to better simulate human emotions and create the illusion of empathy, he attempted to pick up several women, likely sensing that his previous target was catching onto his game and he needed to start working on his plan B.

Several sources from England confirm that Lee was disinherited, not because his father remarried some vengeful gold digger (which is apparently what all women are, according to Lee, unless they’re dead), but because his parents saw that he was a terrible husband, father, and human being. Unfortunately, Lee is able to spin this story to gain your trust by making himself seem magnanimous and forgiving. We can put you in touch with sources to confirm all of this and if you want to go digging in England, no doubt you would find additional documentation as proof.